“ We always remembered our visits to aunt Lorene. I don't remember a time that she wasn't smiling.
My daughter Cheri , in her memorial, mentioned Aunt Lorene working at a aircraft plant during world war 2 and on a visit to the town she worked at she came out to see us and handed me a approximately 3 in. by 3 in piece of shiny aluminum plate and told me it was from a B-17 bomber or a B-29 the plant built . I was so proud of that gift and will always remember it. She was always full of surprises and on another visit she asked if we would like to join them to go to church. My parents said yes we would and Aunt lorene drove us out into the woods somewhere around Henderson and it was very dark out there. We could see bright lights out in the forest and soon saw a large tent with folding chairs sitting on sawdust as a floor and a minister and lots of people and a piano. It was a traveling minister i think she said and it was a nice event to go to. I can still imagine the smell of freshly cut sawdust and it had such a clean smell. Aunt lorene will be so missed but she is happy I'm sure in her heavenly home with her husband Dewayne . My daughter,Cheri, was planning to visit her recently but found out she had passed away some time ago

“ I only met my grandmother's youngest sister Lorene twice in my life - in 2011 and in 2016. I spent the afternoon with her in 2011 getting to know her, and her telling me stories about my grandmother (her oldest sister) and my dad and his brother. I'm sad I didn't know her growing up. She was my dad's favorite aunt. The second time I went to visit her, she was out in the hallway os the assisted living home in her wheelchair, and she didn't notice I was standing there. She pulls her chair up behind a man sitting in his chair and yells to him "Sitck 'em up, this is a hold up!" She was laughing and it just cracked me up! My dad said she was a Rosie the Riverter back in WW2 in Fort Worth at a plant that worked on building B29s I believe and she snuck him out something as a souvenir that she could have gotten in trouble for. I'm sure my father will tell about that in his tribute. I wish we had known of your passing, Aunt Lorene. I drove from Dallas today to visit your grave and your parents' graves and I put some flowers on both of them. Rest in peace.....
